This image shows a fragment of an ancient Chinese bronze inscription. The fragment is dark and irregularly shaped, with several vertical columns of characters in a stylized, archaic script. The characters are light-colored against the dark background of the metal. The script is characteristic of the late Shang or early Zhou periods. The fragment is oriented vertically, and the characters are arranged in columns, reading from right to left. The characters are highly stylized and difficult to decipher without a key, but they appear to be a mix of archaic forms and more recognizable characters. The fragment is likely a part of a larger bronze object, such as a ritual vessel or a commemorative tablet.
